

Dementia and Alzheimer's Care

According to the Alzheimer's Association, "More than 6 million Americans are living with Alzheimer's. By 2050 this number is projected to rise to nearly 13 million."

Caregivers Home Health Services can help your patients with memory or cognitive changes and their families through our clinical team to address health, mobility, and safety concerns in the home.

Our experienced clinical team can help patients and families respond to challenging behaviors such as aggression, agitation, repetition, and more.

Caregivers' Nurses, Therapists, and Social Workers may work with patients in the following ways:

- Address physical health needs
- Teach the caregiver effective ways to bathe, dress and manage with loved one's daily activities of living
- Improve communication
- Teach the caregiver strategies to manage the care needs of their loved one with dementia
- Manage medications
- Provide a safety and mobility assessment

Chronic care diagnoses such as heart failure, COPD, or diabetes can make caring for a patient with memory issues more difficult. Having a nurse or therapist in the home to coordinate treatment plans may increase compliance and outcomes.
